JACQUES LA RAMÉE (1815)
Seventy-five years before Wyoming was admitted into the union, French Canadian fur trader and mountain man Jacques La Ramée trekked the great High Plains. He returned in 1820 for a season of trapping along the river that now bears his name and was never seen or heard from again. The details of his disappearance are still a mystery, but the town of Laramie, two rivers, a fort, a county and a mountain peak bear his name today.

FORT SANDERS (1866)
A frontier military post built on July 19, 1866, Fort Sanders was originally named Fort John Buford. It was later renamed in honor of Civil War General William P. Sanders. Constructed mostly of wood, most of the fort deteriorated over time. Some of the original guardhouse stones are all that exist today. Erected to protect the Overland Trail travelers and workers constructing the Union Pacific Railway from hostile Indian attacks, the remnants of the old fort can still be seen three miles south of Laramie on Highway 287.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD (1868)
Union Pacific Railroad track construction crews connected Laramie to the east coast on May 4, 1868. Passengers began arriving the same day and a regular train schedule was established less than a week later. The railroad brought in civilization, inspiring residents and newcomers to build a town out of the hell-on-wheels-style tent city. Laramie was Union Pacific’s western hub, but the company moved on when the first transcontinental railroad neared completion. Visitors can tour Depot Park to get up close and personal with the area’s ironclad history.

WYOMING TERRITORIAL PRISON (1872)
One of Wyoming’s oldest stone buildings, the Wyoming Territorial Prison housed more than 1,000 outlaws including the notorious Butch Cassidy. Built in 1872, the site served as a federal and state prison until 1903 when a new penitentiary was completed in Rawlins about 100 miles west of Laramie. The University of Wyoming was given the prison grounds to be repurposed into an experiment station for the College of Agriculture. In 1991, the historic site was opened to the public, and today, Wyoming State Parks manages the property as one of Albany County’s several historic museums.

BILL NYE AND BOOMERANG (1881)
Bill Nye, more formally known as Edgar Wilson Nye, was the first editor of the Laramie Boomerang. He named the paper for his mule because of what he described as the “eccentricity of his orbit.” As Nye’s son Frank said, something about the word “boomerang” piqued Nye’s imagination. “His mule, his mine, his newspaper, his (first) book (Bill Nye and Boomerang), all bore the trademark.”
Native Americans, fur trappers, frontier forts, the Union Pacific Railroad and famous outlaws are just some aspects of Laramie’s rich western heritage — a heritage Hollywood was keen to build upon. Western movies and TV shows peaked in the 1950s and 1960s. From TV shows such as “Lawman” (1958-62) starring John Russell, “Laramie” (1959-63) starring John Smith and Robert Fuller to films like “The Man from Laramie” (1955) starring James Stewart, “Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid” (1969) starring Paul Newman and Robert Redford, Albany County has fascinated writers and directors alike. But America’s infatuation with Wyoming’s wide-open spaces and roughneck culture didn’t disappear after westerns fell from the limelight. “Hell on Wheels” (2011) starring Anson Mount focused heavily on the area and dedicated an entire episode to Laramie. While Laramie secured several A-list titles, the area was used in a slew of “B” movies as well. With a western on every major network and hundreds of popular western books, Laramie’s abundant history has inspired storytellers for more than a hundred years.

Laramie's founding women made world history. This year on September 6th, we celebrate the 150th anniversary of Laramie’s own Louisa Swain and her historic ballot. She cast the first female vote under laws giving women and men fully equal voting rights in 1870. Stop by our historic museums and vibrant downtown to relive the history of the Equality State for the Year of Wyoming Women.

Hiking, Biking & Climbing

Bike or hike the easy 3.2-mile loop that circles Turtle Rock in the Medicine Bow National Forest. From the gravel parking strip just above the main trailhead area, walk downhill to the paved area at the base of the weathered formation. Head northwest on the easy trail as it winds beneath aspen and squeezes between Turtle Rock’s boulder-strewn base and a marshy wetland to the south. This first section of trail affords up-close views of the piled, cracked rock and climbers making their way up the face, before gaining some distance from the formation as it turns east. Scattered fir and pine trees line the trail as it rolls over several small hills past the rock’s sloped backside.

Turtle Rock Trail - Vedauwoo

MEDICINE BOW PEAK
Topping out at 12,014 feet, Medicine Bow Peak is the highest point in southern Wyoming. The most common hiking route starts from Lewis Lake, with a steep trek up 1,200 feet in elevation over only 1.6 miles to the boulder-strewn summit. This climb offers world-class views of the Laramie plains and the glacial lakes below.

VEDAUWOO
Vedauwoo is considered a rock climbing mecca. Here you will find some of the best climbing in the state, ranging from 5.0 to 5.14 difficulty with many places to practice crack climbing. Rock climbing at Vedauwoo can take on many forms: climbing, belaying or repelling. Vedauwoo is derived from the Arapaho word “bito’owu” meaning “earth-born.” The characteristic hoodoos and outcrops of this region are made of 1.4 billion year old Sherman Granite, some of the oldest rock in Wyoming, still a billion years younger than the Tetons.
The Snowy Range Mountains, located 35 miles west of Laramie, offer a wide range of alpine recreation experiences. How should you explore this beautiful mountain range? The options are plentiful, though they are of course impacted by the time of year. The following is an itinerary my husband and I drew up for an August weekend (Friday – Sunday) in the locally-named and loved “Snowies.”

Evening Trout Fishing at Lewis and Libby Lakes
After arriving at Sugarloaf, we set up the tent, assembled our fly rods, and eagerly set off to Lewis and Libby Lakes, conveniently located just a short walk from our site. As the sun set above Medicine Bow Peak, we fished for cutthroat and brook trout, reflecting on the busy week, and felt gratitude for the place we live.

Rent UTVs from Albany Lodge
We packed up camp and headed down the mountain to the small town of Albany, home to Albany Lodge. To get there, pass through Centennial and turn south onto Highway 11. Albany Lodge is tucked into a canyon at the base of the Snowy Range and rents UTVs, kayaks, and snowmobiles, and also offers guided tours of the area. You can rent UTVs (also known as side-by-sides) by half or full days. We opted for a half-day, and from our UTVs, we saw parts of the Snowy Range that we have never seen before, faster than we had ever seen before.

Traveling across Wyoming on I-80 you will find some unique roadside curiosities and attractions. Make sure you stop to explore these gems of Wyoming history.

Ames Monument
On Interstate 80 at Vedauwoo (exit #329), turn south and take a short drive to the Ames Monument. An unusual 60 ft. pyramid-shaped monument, this haunting limestone mass stands alone on the prairie and towers over the remains of the railroad ghost town of Sherman. This monument was built in 1881 to honor the Ames brothers, Oliver and Oakes, who were influential leaders in the construction of the transcontinental railroad.

Abraham Lincoln Memorial Monument
The imposing Abraham Lincoln Memorial Monument (exit #323) was sculpted by University of Wyoming art professor Robert Russin in 1959 to commemorate the highest point on the Lincoln Highway. Also look for the Henry Joy Monument surrounded by a fence with four Lincoln Highway concrete markers. There are interesting displays inside the building and great views outside.

Tree in the Rock
On Interstate 80 near MM #333, this small tree has fascinated travelers since the first train rolled past on the Union Pacific Railroad. It is said that the builders of the original railroad diverted the tracks slightly to pass by the tree as they laid rails across the Sherman Mountains in 1867-69. The train used to stop here while the locomotive firemen “gave the tree a drink” from their water buckets.
DEERWOOD RANCH WILD HORSE ECOSANCTUARY
The Deerwood Ranch is approximately 4,700 acres of Wyoming beauty. Three hundred and fifty wild Wyoming mustangs call Deerwood home, not to mention the native deer, elk, coyote and all manner of wildlife. With the Middle Fork of the Little Laramie River running through the property, there is year-round access to open running water. Abundant trees and willows provide refuge and great protection from the realities of Wyoming winter. The ranch is conveniently located approximately 35 miles west of Laramie and south of Centennial. Call 48 hours in advance, (307) 399-9956.

CENTENNIAL, WYOMING
Located on the eastern edge of the Snowy Range Scenic Byway (Wyoming Highway 130), Centennial was settled by railroad crews working to complete the first Transcontinental Railroad. Just below the Medicine Bow National Forest, the area provided wood for the railroad ties connecting the Union Pacific and Central Pacific lines. Later, the discovery of gold lured miners, prospectors and merchants to the area. Centennial is now a year-round destination, rustic yet comfortable, that serves as the Gateway to the Snowy Range.

ROCK RIVER, WYOMING
Another town born from the ashes of “Hell on Wheels,” Rock River was founded after the Union Pacific Railroad moved the railroad line west of the Rock Creek Station in 1898. Located 40 miles northwest of Laramie, about 250 people call the agricultural hamlet home. Explore late 19th and early 20th century architecture in a friendly small-town atmosphere hard to come by in today’s fast-paced world.

WOODS LANDING, WYOMING
Set alongside the soothing waters of the Laramie River, Woods Landing offers travelers a rustic peek at small-town life in Wyoming. A 25-mile drive southwest of Laramie, this mountain village is a chance to step back in time and enjoy old-fashioned hospitality and family values while enjoying the spectacular scenery. The Woods Landing Dance Hall was placed on the National Register of Historic Places on December 13, 1985. Beneath the oak inset patterned floor are 24 boxcar springs that give the floor bounce and flexibility for dancers.

ALBANY, WYOMING
Nestled into a canyon at the base of the Snowy Range, this quaint resort town attracts thousands of visitors each year. Travelers can find rest, relaxation and local lore at the Albany Lodge. Located a few miles from Rob Roy Reservoir, Albany is a gateway point for anyone fishing, boating or snowmobiling through the Medicine Bow National Forest.

ALBANY COUNTY
Albany County is home to two monuments of elevated grandeur — Ames Monument, a pyramid designating the highest elevation along the Union Pacific Railroad, and the Lincoln Memorial Monument, the highest point along the Lincoln Highway, now Interstate 80. Motorists traveling I-80 can also stop and enjoy the Tree in the Rock, a tree sprouted from two granite boulders. Other points of interest in the area include the Overland Trail and Old Fort Sanders, located south of Laramie on Highway 287, now home to the Cavalryman Steakhouse.
SNOWMOBILING IN THE SNOWY RANGE

The Snowy Range earns its namesake with some of the most consistent and fluffy powder in the American West. Explore Albany County’s winter trails and play areas via motorized sled for the snowmobiling experience of a lifetime.

The Snowies have over 200 miles of groomed trails and 120 miles of marked ungroomed trails, boasting 300+ inches of snow per year.

If you’re expecting country music and cowboy boots, that’s what you’ll get in Laramie, Wyoming, but you’ll also get a vegetarian restaurant, more ethnic bistros than you have ever imagined, craft beer, craft cheese, craft ice cream and craft chocolate. Unexpected? That’s Laramie, Wyoming. The downtown area is located next to an active railyard and periodically Laramie’s old buildings rumble as a train goes by, which happens fairly frequently. A large foot and bicycle bridge joins the east and west sections of the town.

If you are looking for the dishes characteristic of a quiet western town, you will find those in Laramie. But also be sure to check out dozens of diverse restaurant offerings, including Thai, Japanese, Mexican, Italian and more. After your meal, enjoy a pint of frothy locally-brewed beer downtown or answer your morning cravings at a local coffee shop bakery or quaint hometown diner.
